

The Whole Team

Building a highly motivated, cohesive group who can lead and collaborate for success

Whole teams are whole by name and whole by nature. They are cohesive and unified in purpose and function. Team members develop their capacity to sense and support the needs of the individual while at the same time enjoying the functionality and satisfaction derived from shared effort and direction.

Whole teams are empowered through clear forms of communication, clarity of role definition and demonstrated behaviours of respect and cooperation. They are transparent and authentic when it comes to resolving conflict. The inevitable tensions of working in groups is seen as a proving ground for personal, professional and team development.*
