

Working the Foyer

Turning encounters into opportunities

Turning encounters into opportunities in casual meeting places such as foyers requires a sense of presence; of being proactive, transparent, empathetic and attuned to the whole needs of those we come in contact with. This is achieved by focusing on three key areas: communication, emotional intelligence and networking (a new philosophy that moves beyond the concept of networking).

We explore a greater understanding of the need to unfold relationships with emotional intelligence. We develop a greater awareness of our personal communication and how it impacts others, particularly those from different generations or backgrounds. We look at ways to integrate our personal selves with our professional selves and pave the way to form new and lasting relationships that are personally and professionally fulfilling.*
